“ Mason was a kind and loving person. He always asked about my family when we spoke. Health-wise, he was dealt a pretty rough hand in life but he went on the best he could. I remember when, at around the age of 10, his parents realized that he couldn't really hear properly. After they realized this and got him a hearing aid, he remarked that, for the first time ever he could hear the forks striking the plates while he was eating.

They say it is better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all. He was blessed in that he found a good person for him and they married. Sadly, she too was in poor health and passed suddenly one night. I can imagine that their memories, though brief, may have been what kept him going at times.
