He decided to make the Navy his career and was assigned to many duty stations. In 1968 he deployed to South Vietnam for his third combat deployment. Charles was never one to sit still. He had a passion for gardening and collecting a vast array of antiques. In his post retirement years Charles and Pat travelled extensively, visiting all the lower forty-eight states and many friends, shipmates and family members along the way. He continued his love of gardening, and one would always find him outside working or resting. Charles devoted his life to his wife Pat and his eight children. He will be remembered as a dedicated, hardworking, kind, unselfish and determined man. He would never hesitate to help a friend, neighbor or family member who needed his help. He leaves a strong legacy of service to country, family and others that will last forever.

“ Charles had the prettiest Crate Myrtles, and a garden to envy! We broke a wagon tongue one time while breaking in a team of horses down at Chris's house. Charles told us to come to his place up the road, he had a welder and other tools we might need. While there, he and my father[now passed] became quick friends. We got it patched up, and Charles joined us in his buggy down at Chris and Megan's for a good long ride. Mom still often asked about Charles and Pat., having met both that same weekend the wagon tongue broke. Dad and Charles talked about Korea, both having served there. I reckon they both are talking now about plowing gardens with stubborn mules, or ornery horses? Rest with God Mr Granberry, I appreciated your acquaintance. JW Slinkard.

“ Uncle Charles was always a great conversationalist. He had interesting stories to share. His memory of dates and events was impressive. He had 8 children to keep up with, but he knew my birthday as well. Uncle Charles always made me feel welcome and safe. His christian character was always present when I was around him.
